12:00p—1:00p Networking Luncheon Complimentary

1:00p—2:30p THREE CONCURRENT ROUNDTABLES

I. Launching Your Own IP Practice

While technology allows IP practitioners the ability to work from almost anywhere, striking out on your own and running a successful IP practice may not be as easy as it seems. Even with technology and e-filing, the business fundamentals must still be in place. Questions to consider include: Do you have a physical location or not? What business form do you adopt? What technology do you need – computers, phones, software (docketing, timekeeping, billing), etc.? How do you find and keep good clients, set fees, and have adequate cash flow, while at the same time managing and marketing your own practice and complying with ethics rules? Come to this roundtable to hear from practitioners who have embarked on such an adventure. The roundtable session will discuss topics of planning, launching, running and growing a successful IP practice.

Moderator: Jeffrey A. Lindeman, Ph.D., J.A. Lindeman & Co. PLLC, Falls Church, VA

Speakers: Kathryn R. Doyle, Ph.D., Riverside Law, West Conshohocken, PA
Lisa A. Dunner, Dunner Law PLLC, Washington, DC

II. What’s Hot on the Hill – Information Technology Legislative Developments

Discuss current U.S. House and Senate committee and subcommittee activities to develop, consider, and evaluate information technology legislation. Topics include privacy, geolocation data and other data tracking, cloud computing, data protection, data breach notification, cybersecurity, and net neutrality legislative proposals and assess which legislation has a reasonable chance of enactment before Congress adjourns at the end of 2012.

Moderator: Mark Wittow, K&L Gates, LLP, Seattle, WA

Speakers: Kelly DeMarchis, Venable LLP, Washington, DC
Steven Emmert, Reed Elsevier Inc., Washington, DC

In the years since the United States Supreme Court’s Bilski decision, courts have struggled to define what is too “abstract” to be patent-eligible, particularly in the area of software and other computer-related inventions. The focus of this roundtable session will be to trace the recent decisions and developments in the area of patentable subject matter under 35 U.S.C. § 101, with a particular emphasis on computer-related patents and the opinions of the Federal Circuit.

The panel will include attorney Neil Smith, who not only represented Reebok International, Ltd. in the leading case authorizing federal courts to freeze a counterfeiter’s assets under the Lanham Act, but also obtained the first on-line asset freeze against a counterfeiter; and attorney Scott Gelin, who obtained one of the most recent asset freeze orders from the Southern District of New York on behalf of his client Tory Burch. Hear from these experts and everyday practitioners about how to obtain and enforce this valuable tool in the arsenal against trademark counterfeitors.

IV. The Document Preservation Dilemma – When is it OK or Not OK to Destroy Documents In-House? (Ethics Credit)

With an ever-increasing volume of electronic data created in the business world, in-house counsel and their outside counsel are routinely faced with the daunting task of balancing a manageable and efficient document retention policy, with the duty to preserve company information when litigation is “reasonably foreseeable.” Indeed, the duty to preserve documents for litigation must be taken seriously, since penalties imposed by a court for what it considers to be intentional destruction, or spoliation, of documents can range from an award of sanctions and/or attorneys’ fees, to default judgment against the accused party. Adding to the complexity of this issue is the perceived absence of a uniform legal standard governing preservation and spoliation issues; creating what one federal magistrate judge described as a “collective anxiety” for in-house counsel and litigators alike.

This session will examine recent legal developments in the area of document preservation and spoliation (including the Federal Circuit’s twin Rambus decisions issued on the same day in 2011), and seek to help litigators and in-house counsel better understand when it is ok, or not ok, to destroy documents. A diverse panel of speakers will provide program attendees with views on this subject from every angle: the bench, in-house counsel, private litigators, and a top e-discovery consultant. In addition, this program will qualify for ethics CLE credit, so all conference participants are encouraged to attend!

III. The Rise and Fall and Rise of Aesthetic Functionality

Design features that don't affect a product's operation or manufacture may still be found to be functional where the visual appeal of the product is such that competitors are unfairly disadvantaged if they can't use the same design. This panel will examine the different ways courts have applied and misapplied the doctrine of aesthetic functionality and explain what the limits of the doctrine should be. Among other cases, the panel will discuss a district court's threat to cancel Christian Louboutin's registration for red-soled shoes (currently on appeal) and the Ninth Circuit's unexplained vacatur of its decision permitting copying of the Betty Boop cartoon character.
